

Do I want to be a prosecutor?

The prosecutor is an official appointed to carry out activities designed to ensure and enforce the laws, as well as the rights and freedoms of man and citizen.

A prosecutor must have certain qualities:

- oratorical ability;
- stress tolerance;
- good memory;
- a keen sense of justice;
- impartiality;
- developed intuition.

Of course, prosecutors have advantages: high salaries, demand for the profession, career advancement, benefits, and more.

However, there are also plenty of disadvantages.

Being a prosecutor is a great responsibility. A person's fate may depend on his or her actions. One mistake can lead to someone's broken life.

It is worth understanding that a prosecutor constantly works in situations that require an immediate response, which involves a shortage of personal time, as well as serious nervous tension. You have to give yourself completely to your work.

Based on the above, I would not want to be a prosecutor. The main reason is that a prosecutor must remain impartial and, even when showing compassion, remain emotionally stable.

It would be very hard for me to pass judgment on the criminals, because they are human beings too, they have family and friends. Perhaps their crime was an accident. But the law is the law. Everyone must suffer the punishment they deserve.

That's why I would like to be a lawyer. For someone like me, it would be better to defend the innocent and be on the side of the defense rather than the prosecution.

Thanks for your attention!
