Harry and Meghan to 'step back as senior royals'

Announcement follows complaints of media bullying and smears

Kevin Rawlinson

The Duke and Duchess of Sussex are to step back from public life and work towards financial self-sufficiency after a period marked by open hostility with the media and constant criticism and bullying.

It is understood that no other member of the royal family was consulted before the decision was announced last night and Buckingham Palace was disappointed by the news.

The couple plan to split their time between the UK and North America, the continent of Meghan's birth, as they raise their son.

Trump edges away from war after Iran retaliation

Donald Trump says his regime will not be weakened by Iran's missile attack on the oil tanker Iranian in the Persian Gulf.

Donald Trump backed away from further military confrontation with Iran yesterday after days of escalating tensions, saying Tehran appeared to attack was retaliation for the US drone strikes that killed the Iranian general Qasem Soleimani.

"We appear to be escalating down, which is a good thing for all parties concerned and a very good thing for the world," Trump said. "The threat to our lives was not because of the president's actions, the deployment of forces, and an early warning system that worked very well."

Trump's speech was notably milder than his more bellicose statements and tweets in the immediate aftermath of Soleimani's killing, in which he threatened to bomb Iranian cultural sites, a potential war crime. The US, in recent days, has deployed 3,500 paratroopers to the Middle East and American bases have been targeted from the region by satellite countries.

Even so, Trump said the United States would continue evaluating options "in response to Iranian aggression" and other additional sanctions the Iran regime would be imposed, he did not elaborate.

Iran is already under such heavy sanctions that few experts believe further US measures would make much economic difference. © Reuters
