

My dream house

When I buy house I prefer to paint a dining room green and gray because it makes me feel relaxed. It's very important for meals

I would paint a child's room orange because it makes everyone feel enthusiastic and talkative. The child should be brought up in a bright and warm colored room.

Also I'd like paint a child's room blue because it has a calming effect when it's needed.

I would like paint a play area yellow because it makes everyone feel cheerful and happy. Kids will play fun games if they are happy.

My living room will be painted red because it can make me feel active and exited. Also I want to use a lot of wood in the interior to create coziness.

I'd like paint a bedroom yellow because it'll make me feel happy when I'll wake up every morning.

I would paint a study blue because it helps me feel calm and confident. This is very important for mental work and handmade.
