Norway on the map

In the beginning, it is worth mentioning the type of culture, because as in all countries, it is different and has some of its own characteristics and interesting facts.

Norway is a country with a rich history. The homeland of the harsh Vikings, today it is one of the most well-fed, calm and prosperous states in the world. The standard of living in Norway is one of the highest, as is the level of social protection. This state attracts not only tourists who want to join the ancient Scandinavian culture, but also immigrants who are ready to overcome any difficulties, just to stay here forever.

- The average salary in Norway fluctuates around five or six thousand euros a month, but you also need to remember that Norway is an incredibly expensive country and, for example, strong alcohol in Norway is not only extremely expensive - it is also sold only in specialized state stores, Energy also costs very, very expensive. The cost of a family of four for electricity for one month can come close to the mark of a thousand euros

use your forests

- There is no deforestation in Norway at all - Norwegians prefer to buy wood from countries that do not care so much about their nature. For example, in Russia

to export forest from Russia

- It is worth mentioning about the conversations. It is not easy to anger the phlegmatic and calm Norwegians, but if you succeeded, run! Norwegians are scary in anger. Apparently, the Viking blood is again affecting. In a normal conversation, they behave as restrained and friendly people with whom they have a good time.

- It is worth noting that in terms of etiquette it is not customary to visit guests without an invitation in Norway.

so if you plan to visit a friend there, then agree in advance

This is where my presentation ends. Thanks for your attention
