Introduction

- Today, the use of the media in the field of education, namely in the lessons of foreign languages, is increasing every day. With the use of information technology, teachers are able to use various media to enrich the language environment of their class, help accelerate the learning process, improve the learning of the subject, and instill interest in the subject being studied.

Factors in Learning English with Media News

- As a rule, the texts of the news program are written clearly and clearly, which makes them perfect for learning the language. In addition, the news is about real life issues. The news focuses on issues that are important to people and are in the spotlight today and now. It makes sense to learn English in the context of current, relevant information from the life of native speakers.

Tasks:

The advantages of using media resources in the lesson are obvious, but there are a number of tasks that need to be addressed. Among them, it is worth highlighting such as the need to combine information from media sources with the material of the school curriculum, changing the habit of learning a language exclusively with the help of textbooks for the active use of newspapers and news sites, as well as creating a personality-oriented learning environment.

- News feeds and sites are some of the best sources for improving English.
- It's much easier to concentrate, learn and remember new information if you are watching, listening or reading about something that really interests you, therefore, if you are more interested in politics, watch (listen, read) news about politics, sports about sports, art - cultural news, business news - business news in English.
- First you need to find news sources on topics that are necessary, exciting and like.
- I picked up some news sites in English specifically designed for language learners.

News sites to help you learn English

- New York Times - the ability to watch and read news according to their level.
- BBC News - presents stories from many countries, offers news in video format and written format, as well as many excellent radio programs.
- Voice of America - provides subtitles in English, commentators speak slowly and clearly, about a third slower than a normal broadcast. This gives novice students great opportunities.
