MINIMALIST GAME

Introduced by Ryan Nicodemus and Joshua Fields Millburn of The Minimalists, this is a method that gamifies the decluttering experience. It's a popular decluttering method with hundreds of people using the #minsgame hashtag on social media every month.

MINIMALIST GAME

Basics: Beginning on the first day of a month, the number of things you declutter corresponds to the day of the month. One item on the first day, two items on the second day, three on the third, and so on. By the end of a 31-day month, you will have removed 496 items from your home if you play all the way through. This game works best when you challenge a friend or family member and see who can keep going the longest.

- Pros: After a month, you will have decluttered a ton of stuff! Removing almost 500 items from your home is no small feat, and you can play as many months in a row as you'd like. Another important aspect of this decluttering method is that it starts small and increases over time. This allows you to build confidence in your decision-making abilities and get increasingly better letting go of stuff.

- Cons: A major downside of minsgame is that you have to stay consistent each day otherwise it's easy to fall behind. Much like Tetris, the difficulty increases each level, and it can also be difficult to keep up if you're inconsistent. Towards the end of the month, you'll need to find a good number of items each day. After a long day of work, the last thing you may want to do is find 25 items to declutter that day.
