An apple tree

There lived a rich farmer who had a friend. His friend had very good apple trees. One day his friend gave the farmer a young apple tree and told him that he could take it home and plant the tree. The farmer was very happy. When he came home, he didn't know where to plant the tree. He thought: "If I plant the tree far from my house, somebody will take my apples. If I plant it near my house, my children will take the apples". So he planted the tree in the forest where nobody could see it. But there was too little sun and the tree died. When the farmer's friend heard of it, he asked the farmer why the tree was in a bad place. "Where could I plant it?" asked the farmer. "I couldn't plant the tree from my house or near my house. Somebody could take my apples". His friend listened to the farmer and said: "Nobody can take your apples now, but you have already lost a nice tree".
