Community center gym nears end of troubled construction process

By Jerry Dillman
Of the News-Times

After the best of intentions, the construction of a new community center gymnasium for the Astoria City Center is nearing its end. The building, which was the last of a series of projects to be completed at the city center, is now being prepared for occupancy. The building is a two-story structure with a large gymnasium on the second floor and a multi-purpose room on the first floor. The building is located at the corner of 1st and Commercial streets in Astoria. The construction process was troubled from the start, with delays and cost overruns. The city has spent over $1 million on the project, and the building is now being prepared for occupancy. The city hopes to open the building to the public in the near future.

Health district and Samaritan disagree over investment promise

By Ted Gallo
Of the News-Times

Health services provided for the community by the Samaritan Health District and the Astoria Health District are at odds over a promise of investment. The Samaritan Health District has promised to invest $1 million in the Astoria Health District over the next five years. However, the Astoria Health District has not received the investment. The Samaritan Health District has said that the investment is being delayed due to budget cuts. The Astoria Health District has said that the investment is being delayed due to a lack of funds. The two districts are currently in negotiations to resolve the dispute.
