

The race for the South Pole

Robert Falcon
Scott

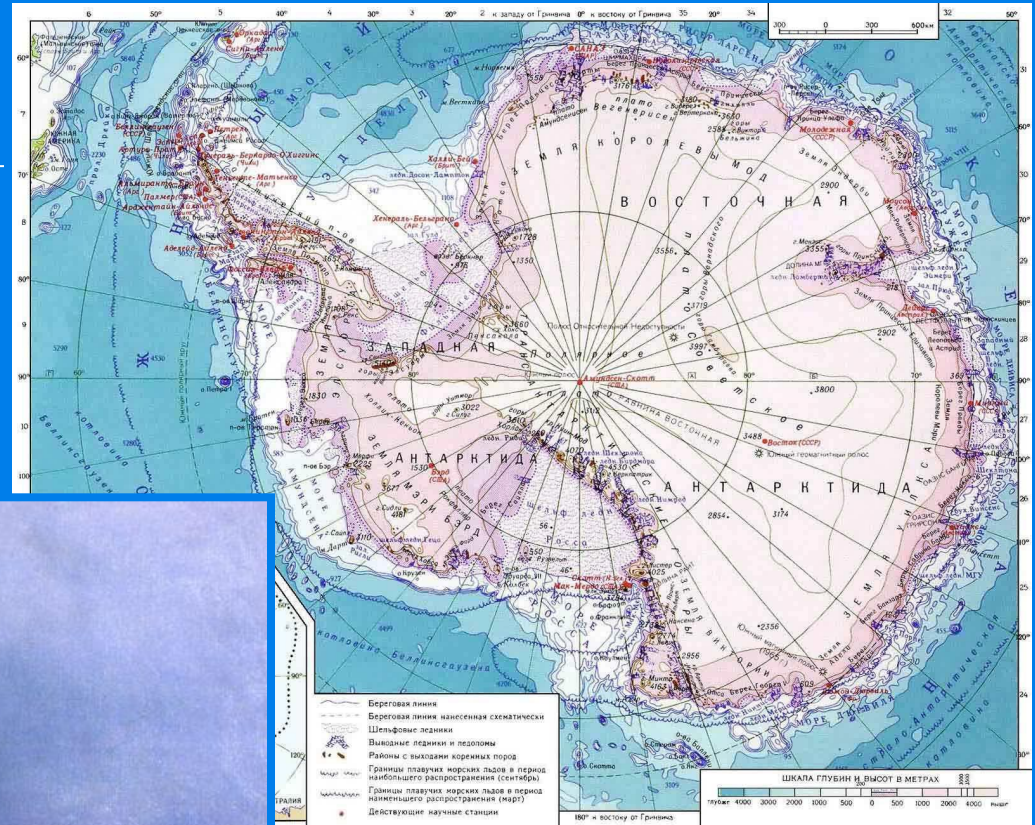

On June 15 1910 the English ship “Terra Nova” left England went to the Antarctic. On a board of the ship was an English naval Officer Robert Falkon Scott. He had a dream. He wanted to be first the first on the South Pole.

On 1 November 1912 Scott and his expedition started to go to the Pole.

Scott had already been to the Antarctic and had prepared for everything.

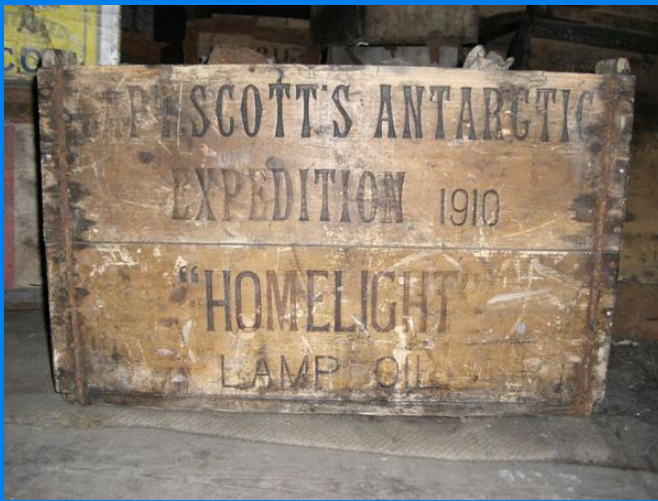

The weather was very bad: it was cold and windy.

He had planned the route and chosen strong brave men

He had thought of everything. But one thing worried Scott: another famous explorer Roald Amundsen from Norway, had also gone to the Antarctic

Scott's expedition remembered about Amundsen and didn't want to lose the race

Very quickly Scott understood that he had made a lot of mistakes

The sledges didn't work. The ponies couldn't walk in a deep snow and soon died. Scott hadn't bought any dogs, and the men had to pull the sledges with their food and equipment

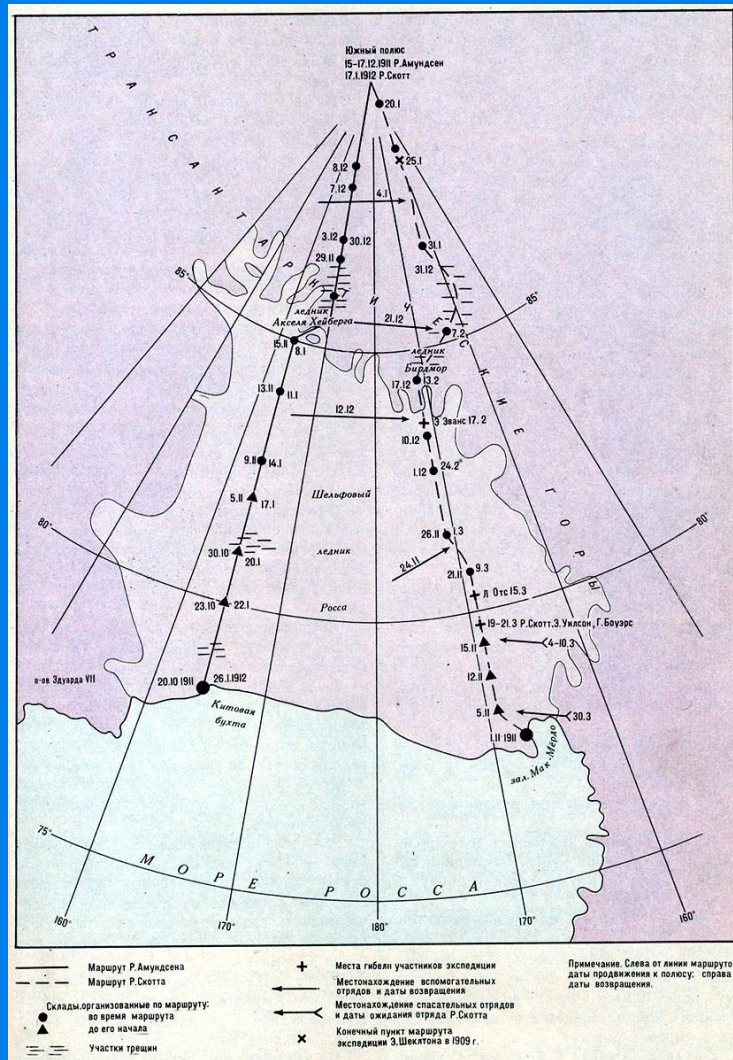

The team had never been to the Antarctic before, so they were not ready for all the difficulties

Finally on 12 January Scott and his men got to the South Pole. There they saw a Norwegian flag; Amundsen had got there two weeks before.

we shall stick it out to the end but we are getting weaker of course and that end cannot be far.
It seems a pity but I do not think I can write more -

For Gods sake look after our people

In the last letter he wrote: "We knew that our expedition was dangerous. But we had been on the South Pole. And I ask for God's sake look after our relatives"

The people in Scott's expedition died on their way back to the camp. Winter killed them.

They were not first at the South Pole. But they showed an example of courage, strength and love for their country in the hearts of people all over world.

There is a simple wooden cross in the Antarctic. People put it there in the memory of the brave Englishmen.

The inscription on the cross is

To strive,

to seek,

to find and not to yield .

Thank you for your work
Good bye!
